*Please remember that it is important to ask questions: How much experience does the neurologist have working with individuals with Parkinson's disease? Is the doctor current on new treatments and research? Does the doctor have any other training that could help with your individual concerns? How can you communicate questions or concerns between scheduled appointments? Is the neurologist covered by your insurance? Choose someone who treats you with respect, answers your questions and takes your opinions seriously. Beyond getting good medical advice, it is important for you to be comfortable talking to your doctor. The choice is always yours.
